If Count Toistoi is a grank this cannot. said of his wife. Not long ago he insisted that his property should be distributed among the poor, and his own family, which includes nine children, should be reduced to the position of beggars. His good wife interposed and succeeded in gaining control of his property and preventing him from wasting it in carrying out his notions. Her position was not unlike that of the late Mrs Concord,' fifty years ago or less, went to Fruitlands to establish a pardise, and finally reached the point where he gave up eating. Mrs Alcott seconded his efforts all the more readily because literally there was nothing to be eaten in the house. The Singapore Free Prees in its account of the landing says :- Escorted by H. E the Governor and H. R. H. Prince George and followed by the Imperial suite, the Czarewitch passed along the line of officers, officials and ladies on his right, courteensly acknowledging their bows in Russian mil tary fashion, and continuing his salute as he traversed the front of the guard of honour and the lowered Queen's colour. The brief opportunity given for observing the personality of the Czarewitch showed him to be a tall well-set-up young Prince, of manly demeanour, whose blue eyes, light hair and fair complexion bespeak his Northern blood, while his frank and honest glance gives sign of a kindly natural disposition. At once the Governor, the Cgarewitch and the Imperial party proceeded to Government house in the carriages that were waiting and in readiness. the greatest interest being taken in the procession by the assembled crowds as it passed along towards Cavenagh Bridge. During the stay at Government House the Czarewitch inscribed his autograph in Lady Clementi Smith's album. Tea was served to the visitors, a little while was spent in general conversation, after which the Czarewitch returned with his suite to the town. Two gentlemen, General Bariatinsky and the Imperial Russian

Consul, drove to Tanglin and returned the visit of Sir Charles Warren. Early this morning the Makut Rajkunis and the Koreye's left for Bangkok, where they will remain until the rest of the squadron arrives. Next week, after the arrivalof the P. & O. mail, the Mandjour is to follow with the Czarewitch's mails having on board M. Vyvodtzeff, the Imperial Russian Consul. BETTING AND GAMBLING.

A Home Magazine Cor February contains a remarkable series of letters from hishops and clergymen and others on betting and gambling. The letters are accompanied by he fac-simile signatures of the writers. I am most thankful to hear (the Bishop of | Carrick yesterday, when violent conflicts Exeter writes) of the great and stronuous took place with the Parnellites, who were effort you are making through young men to of betting and gamdling. It is hard to say whether impurity, drankomess, or gambiing commits the deadliest bavoo in our land think young men have realised the greatness of the evil summed up in the two words Betting and Gambling He says They orgage in these things from careless thoughtlessness and the pleasure of excitement, and seldom feel until too late the danger, they meur. I am notone of those who can teach that overy little trivial wager is a sin any more than [ can teach that it is a sin to drink a glass of wine or bear. But when I see he terrible fascination which the practice of gambling gradually exercises, and know the ruinous effects to the moral character of the gambler, not to speak of the misery constantly inflicted on the innocent by this passion, I am bound to warn, all whom I can influence against the anbile growth of a habit which always begins until Her Imperial Highness takes her dewith acts which seem harmless at the time. parture. The parallel with drinking is very close. In each case habits are the products of repeated acts, and in each case the surest way to avoid the formation of the habit is to avoid the apparate acts which tend to produce it." The chief misohievous effect of gambling (says the Roy, Prebendary Harry Jones) is not the dimensial loss or ruin which it sometimes entails; but the radigal harm it does to soon in the un aettlement of mind wolch it gives rish to. [GP] It disintegrates the grit of true humanity. It weakens belief in honest work. It tends to destroy that generous individual self-reliance which is the social hope of a people. It diverts energy from productive operation, and, above all, puts us out of touch with a living God, who, in His economy, leaves nothing to "chance," The Rev. J. E. C. Welldon, head master of Harrow, and perhaps the most popular school-master in the United Kingdom. is opposed to gambling in all forms and under all conditions. 'But.' he says, 'if I am to speak of betting and gambling as public questions, it seems to me necessary to make a distinction between On what is wrong and what is inexpedient. I cannot see that it is wrong itself to bet unless the person who bets stakes money which is not his own, or which is more than he can justly afford-i e, unless he runs the risk of involving himself or somebody clse in pecuniary trouble. Thus, to say that a On rich man who plays whist for threepenny points commits a sin, is, in my judgment to strain the law of morality almost to On spapping. But what is not in itself wrong may be highly inexpedient: and I think | On that any one who regards the interests of the community at the present time can easily see that it would be best for him to On abstain from betting and gambling altogether. Canon Barker considers that gamb. ling and betting engender an entirely wrong On conception of life. To look to chance and hazard, instead of personal exertion, selfcontrol and probity, for the development | On Shanghaiand happiness of life is to commit the grayest error, and resembles the attempt to build

NEWS BY THE FRENCH MAIL DISCUSSION ON ARMY MATTERS IN PARLIAMENT

London, February, 20th-Mr Hanbury's otion brought forward in the House of Commons last might, for improving the positi n of the soldiers of our Army, was withdrawn after a long debate. Sir E. Halatey said he regretted that the commercial prosperity of the country had caused a diminution in the number f recruits. Regarding the physical competency, of the men, he declared that service had touched buttom W. Mr garding the pay, accommodation, and raions of the Army, and said it was not noces ary to offer any greater inducements to recruits to enlist. He then said it had been resolved to appoint a committee to consider the question of deferred pay, short service, the arming of coaling stations, and the addition of modern guns to our fortreases, some of which abroad had been almost completed. Mr Stanliope said that ha intended to propose a large increase in
